Section 101 of the Copyright Act of 1976, which provides that the reproduction of a copyrighted work in a format that is not the original format, such as the reproduction of a printed book in a digital format, is not considered a new work for the purposes of the Act. This provision is intended to protect the rights of authors and publishers by ensuring that their works are not reproduced in a format that would allow them to be used in a way that they did not intend.
